

It has come to my understanding Sinclair Broadcasting has made a decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary "Stolen Honor" days before the election.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. I don't see how airing an anti-Kerry documentary serves the public interest. It would serve the public interest if stations balanced their opinion by airing, for example, "Going Upriver" along side "Stolen Honor".

In an era of allegations of stolen elections, lies, misinformation, it seems the FCC has a very big responsibility to keep things as non-partisan as possible.
Thank you
